Description

With Christmas coming, and so many "Baby Yodas", I put together a Christmas manger scene starring our favorite characters from Disney+'s live action Star Wars series "The Mandalorian".

I did a lot of clean up work on some of the models and scaled them all to match the scene. For some of the more detailed models, I created more easily "printable" versions by fattening them up.

I printed everything smaller than the large grain sack with a 0.25 mm nozzle and printed the rest with a 0.4mm nozzle.

For those with smaller printers, the floor and rear wall also come split in two parts. Don't forget to rotate the larger pieces to fit diagonally, and you can slightly shrink the bantha to fit. :)

This manger scene was put together from models from a lot of great artists. Credits at the end.

Help

Some of the files have updates. Be sure to check back if you have problems with any of the files.

If you have any issues, please let me know so that I can fix them right away, or send me any fixes so that I can update this project. Thank you!

Merry Christmas and Happy Holidays!

Enjoy!

Please share and please don't forget to subscribe to my son's Youtube video for updates on this project and others. Thank you!

Print instructions

You may want to print the "printable" versions of the models, depending on your skill level and the printer. I used mostly the printable versions, except I used the regular files for the kid and the grain sack.

Start with the tightest crib stand and go down if it doesn't fit.

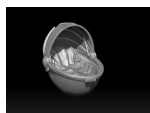

Some of the models are very small, like the kid and the porgs. If you have a smaller nozzle, like 0.25mm, use that and print with a small layer height like 0.12mm.

Print the larger items, including Mando and Cara, with a larger nozzle so it doesn't take as long.

A lot of the items require supports, so be sure to turn them on.

For the manger, print two of the RL_wall files. They are the same. The second drawback is just a mirror of the first one.
