I wasn't particularly happy with the selection of printable SOAP shoes for Jakks figures that I found online. They seemingly were either not very great quality, or behind a paywall. Thanks to Bambu Studio's mesh boolean tool, I was able to take the model of the shoe (said to be from Sonic Frontiers) and make a hole for Sonic's legs.

I got the model of the shoes off of Sketchfab, and the model for the cavity in the shoe came from Pitt817. At the time of typing this, they have not uploaded this model online. You can find their Cults3D here.

After about 5-6 versions of this model to get the sizing of the shoes and socket to how I like it, I can now say that I am satisfied with the model and feel happy to share with the world. Everyone deserves a good model.

Print Settings

To be honest, you should not need any particularly special settings or filament. I used a .4mm nozzle printing PLA, with a layer height of 0.15, 3 wall loops, 20% gyroid infill, and organic tree supports. However, I really don't think you need to be very particular with this print. Feel free to change any of these settings, but do keep in mind that it needs to be sturdy enough to withstand you shoving Sonic's legs in those holes!

Feel free to remix this model, share it with people, or even sell it. If you remix or sell the model, please credit me so people have access to the original model. The last thing I would want is someone selling a model they got for free and people not being able to find the original.

Enjoy!
