When you have a big family, it's hard to find adeqately big toothbrush stand. Trust me, I know. One-two, maybe three, the biggest I've seen so far is capable of holding six toothbrushes. So my daughter have modelled this one. She is learning CAD, and she is very proud. I am too, to be honest.

Third "layer" was added to hold brushes better: with top and bottom only it's easy to put yor brush at the angle and miss the bottom. My children always do that, and clean and simple stand looks like drunk hedgehog.

It doesn't matter what type of filament you use for this print - no excessive loads, no strange geometry, so everything that you are comfortable with is good enough: PLA, PETG, all the usual suspects. On my Qidi Q2 with 0.6 nozzle three perimeters and 15% infill are enough.
