You will have to buy and attach hinges separately if you want a functioning lid, however they are not too expensive

A few months ago, I designed a very basic watch box to store some watches, but I never really liked it, so I decided to abandon the project until a few weeks ago I ran out of space to store my collection, so I designed this watch box. It can store up to 4 watches comfortably.

It comes with two types of printable inserts, one slotted and one solid, I prefer the slotted insert because it makes it easier to attach the watches to it whether it is a strap or a metal bracelet.

For this watch box you will need to buy some small hinges, I suggest Amazon for convenience.

And a clasp if you want to. I will be adding a clasp to the front of mine to help hold it shut but you don't have to.

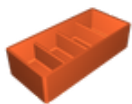

The lid doesn't have cutouts or holes for hinges or screws allowing you to decide on which side you want to be the front. It also allows you to thread into the plastic and not need any threaded inserts.

If you have any problems or questions, feel free to ask and I'll try to respond.

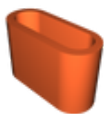

This model is not a remix but allows you to create a remix if you want.

Some people have found there to be too tight of a tolerance between the inserts and the box itself, if you run into this problem or want to prevent it then you can reduce the overall width within the slicer (only by a little bit)
