Every time you crack open a board game box, a thousand little plastic baggies stand between you & getting everything ready to play. You laboriously dump each into its own little finger bowl or takeaway container, or maybe you just shake them out onto the tabletop like an animal. Whenever you vacuum, you inevitably find tokens rattling about under coffee tables & in couch cushions where your careless friends dropped them.

Surely we can do better.

These trays make it easy to corral & shuttle different sets of tokens around. You can stack them to liberate a little table space if you're running out of room, or to transport them to a different location. They also have a groove on the side, allowing you to rubber-band the stack together with a lid & throw it into the box. (This makes setup quick & painless.)

Happy gaming!

V2 UPDATE - Squares. Are they strictly better than circles? Philosophers disagree, but they give you more storage in a rectangular box.
